Before the Canadian Pacific

THINK OF A CANADA without Vancouver and Victoria! Without Winnipeg? Without the wonderful cities of the plains!

Think of a Canada ending at Lake Huron, its commercial arm reaching feebly by steamer to the head of the lakes—the fertility of its plains growing fodder for buffaloes—its trade with the mighty West a traffic in beavers' pelts!

That was Canada of the 'eighties.

Small wonder that the sovereign rights to the Northwest were transferred to the Dominion of Canada for £300,000! Without transportation, Canada's boundless acres had no value. Moreover, from a national view that stretch of wilderness was a formidable barrier to a United Canada, for it lay between the mountain-walled colony on the Pacific and the older provinces of the East.

Building the railroad across this unsettled, unproductive continent was the supreme test of the growing nation's courage, its vision, and its resources.

The Canadian Pacific was young Canada's answer to those who questioned her political future. By binding together her widely-scattered peoples, by uncovering the wealth of the prairies, by opening the highway from the Orient to Europe, the Canadian Pacific laid the foundation of Canada's greatness. The achievements—and ideals—of the doughty Canadians of the 'eighties have been the inspiration for the great works of national development carried on by the Canadian Pacific.
